Hat and Parasol Which Will Mark Their Owner as Thoroughly Cognizant of the Styles.

The hat shown here was covered with dull black faille, the crown in plain silk, while on the narrow rolling brim the silk is shirred. On the two ears silk is laid in tucks closely set and bound with the same. The parasol of dull black taffeta on the left is severely plain with ebony handle and handle trimming of shirred silk, while the one on the right of dull black broad-clothed silk shows a carved stick. A smart little bag of moire with gun-metal trimmings is shown in the center of the group.

PRESENT MODES IN LINGERIE

Best Form of Brassiere Is of Embroidered Flouncing—Handsome Petticoats With Lace Inserts.

A brassiere made entirely of embroidered flouncing has a V neck, surplice front, with a few bones on each side and center front and back, no other waist being needed under a net blouse. A short brassiere has a narrow frill of lace at the lower edge, and is cut almost straight around top and bottom, with flat shoulder straps, and fastens in front.

Camisoles, which are brassieres made with the little shoulder caps, encircle the body with a tiny frill of net above, not reaching above the arms, with ribbons over the shoulders. This lace is fastened to a narrow piece of doubled net, with beading through which ribbon is run. Very thin lengthwise strips of embroidery may form a camisole, with lace three inches wide across the top. They fasten on the left side.

Little chemi-vests to be worn next to the flesh are made of nainsook, crepe, china silk, lawn, etc., and are 24 to 29 inches long and without an inch of extra material. An embroidered scallop on the edge is the prettiest finish.

Hand embroidered nainsook flouncing makes handsome petticoats, with lace inserts. A silk model of a petticoat has a full length gusset of silk Jersey at every seam, which gives with the wearer's movements, and yet the garment clings closely to the figure. Tango petticoats are of the fine crepe de chine with a side plaited ruffle of chiffon beaded with tiny flat roses.

FOR WORKERS IN EMBROIDERY

Raffia Effective for Almost Any Purpose to Which It May Be Applied.

Something very new, easy to accomplish and giving delightfully satisfactory results is raffia embroidery. It is effective when worked on plain white material in soft shades of blue raffia, including dark blue, pale blue and a third shade of a decidedly greenish tint to lend variety to the work.

This effective embroidery is used on screens, trays, fancy boxes, cushion covers and other articles too numerous to mention. For a foundation any loosely woven white material answers well. Cotton crepe serves the purpose admirably, but as it stretches considerably during the process of working it is necessary to use an embroidery frame.

The design you wish to transfer should be placed behind the material, which is semi-transparent, and traced through. Blue water color paint makes a nice outline, a fine brush being used for the work. The raffia must be soaked in water for a short time before using to render it soft and pliable. When used damp it is not so liable to split.

Crewel needles are the kind to use for this work. The method of working is extremely simple, satin stitch being employed for the most part, though many outlines are formed of strands of raffia laid on the surface and couched down with narrow threads of raffia of the same color.

Gloves.

Nothing gives a smarter finish to the costume than good gloves, and if they are inferior they are the means of spoiling in other ways a satisfactory toilet. It is economy to have them made to order and buy them several at a time. A light fawn shade is more elegant, makes the hand less conspicuous, and goes better with a greater number of dresses than does white.
